Clugston Comments:ACADEMIC DEAN, COMPLETING 30 YEARS AT THE COLLEGE, REFLECTS ON GROWTH AND CHANGES HE HAS WITNESSED

(Editor's Note: This spring marks the completion of 30 years of service on the St. Cloud State College faculty for Academic Dean Herbert A. Clugston. Although he soon will step down as dean, Dr. Clugston will continue to teach until his retirement in 1963. On the occasion of his 30th "anniversary", Dean Clugston was asked to reflect at random on those eventful years between 1931 and 1961, and to comment on the present situation as he sees it. The following paragraphs summarize those observations.)

GROWTH

From the vantage point of 30 years at the college, the last 17½ as academic dean, one gains perspective with respect to the growth that has taken place. Growth brings with it both the good and the not so good. Predominantly, it has brought good to this college. The student body has grown to proportions unpredictable in 1931. The total enrollment for the fall quarter of 1931 was 1,001. Full-time, on-campus enrollment last fall was 3,096.

The curriculum has undergone many changes. A major curriculum revision in 1934 under the leadership of Dr. John McCrary witnessed the struggle between those who desired a more liberal education and those who wanted to retain the emphasis on methods. The "general constants" were established at this time, anticipating by 16 years the arrival of the "general education" program. The majors and minors included these general constants, the special methods courses and student teaching. A second major curriculum revision in 1950 corrected this situation by eliminating these and creating more substantial major-minor areas. The influx of men students after World War II created a demand for a more diversified curriculum. No longer was the college to be a single purpose institution for educating teachers. First came the pre-professional curriculums and joint registration with the University of Minnesota. Then came the demand for the bachelor of arts degree curriculum. Finally, in response to mounting requests, came the graduate program with its master of science in education degree. All of these created demands for new courses, new emphases and new staff. In 1960, a Curriculum Survey Committee was created to study intensively the curriculum and instructional organization of the college. Findings and recommendations of this committee are even now being implemented. Ever mindful of its fine reputation, the college seeks further refinement and development of its program and studies.

CURRICULUM

The college has developed areas for preparation of teachers in special education, such as speech correction, mental retardation, cerebral palsy, reading and counseling. It has sponsored a program making school psychologists available to area schools unable to afford these services by themselves.

SPECIAL SERVICES

The Psychological Services Center has enjoyed phenomenal success. Begun in 1948 for the purpose of developing a program of counseling and remedial reading, it has become recognized as one of the outstanding centers of its kind in the Upper Midwest. The organization and development of the Bureau of Instructional Resources has made more functional the excellent library, the audio-visual center and the curriculum laboratory.

One of the outstanding accomplishments has been the development of the off-campus student teaching program. Now operating in 26 cooperating public schools, it is providing students with the opportunity to live the life of a teacher and to learn the art of teaching under the supervision of well-prepared college supervisors and competent participating classroom teachers. Cooperating schools are now, in fact, a part of the college program for the education of teachers.

OFF-CAMPUS STUDENT TEACHING

An expression one often heard years ago was, "We're just one big happy family." By and large that was true. We of the faculty knew each other and each other's families. There were no divisions, departments, chairmen or deans, other than the dean of women and dean of men. The spirit of cordiality was nearly universal. It became traditional and spilled over into student-faculty relationships. One of the marks of distinction which likewise became a tradition was the warmth and freedom of communication between student and teacher. Unfortunately, the increase in the size of the faculty and the student body is threatening these basic traditions -- one of the "not-so-goods" of growth. It appears to be inevitable. Once the faculty was, for the greater part, housed in one building. Now we have divisions housed in separate buildings. Once we knew nearly every student on the campus by his first name. Now we don't. The mutual loss is great. Every effort should be made to keep the "family" tradition alive.

"FAMILY" TRADITION

There is much talk today about academic standards and here, again, the St. Cloud tradition has been good. If the proof of the pudding is in the eating, then we can be justly proud because our "product" has been well received. Increased numbers and complex problems may threaten this cherished tradition. The influx of students in recent years has brought many to us who are incapable of mastering a collegiate level academic program as well as too many who have little desire to do so. This situation has called forth many devices that pose as academic standards. Most of them are good when wisely employed but too often become "hard boiled" or artificial. It is true that we must employ a system of selective retention under present-day enrollment conditions when there is no selective admission. Otherwise, true academic standards are difficult to maintain. However, there is no substitute for good classroom instruction for maintaining high academic standards. The student must be our first concern. It is the professional obligation of every college teacher to maintain the highest possible level of instruction for, regardless of class size or student incompetency, it is the quality of instruction that counts. Let the failures fall as they will.

ACADEMIC STANDARDS

St. Cloud State College has grown but, more significantly, it has made progress. Its heritage is behind us but its achievements and contributions are with us. Mistakes have been made. The present is in our hands and the future lies before us. As we profit by the failures of the past we make more secure the successes of the future. As we continue and increase our dedication to the task -- the education of the youth of Minnesota -- we shall minimize future failures. One might be tempted to declaim, "Gird your loins!" or "Take up the banner!" or "Onward and upward!" But permit me just to say, "Keep going, gang."

Budd in administrative matters. White will complete requirements for a Ed.D. degree this winter at Michigan State University.

Greetings from President Budd

DESPITE VARIED DUTIES,
WE HAVE COMMON GOAL

There was a time when St. Cloud State College was so small that the president could easily extend a "welcome back" to each faculty member in the fall.

Today, with more than 200 of you scattered over the campus, it is more difficult to convey personal greetings.

Nevertheless, I want you to know that your return, or your arrival if you're new, pleases me a great deal. It also signifies the beginning of a banner year for higher education in general and for St. Cloud in particular.

To get the ball rolling, we have scheduled faculty meetings from which you will gain important and useful information. Your own contributions will be welcomed, too.

In these meetings, as well as throughout the year, we should keep reminding ourselves that however varied our individual duties may be, all of us share a common goal: to provide quality education for every student enrolled.

End of "pep talk". Now it's time to roll up our sleeves. Glad you're here to help.

Although the curriculum will be increased from 61 to 68 quarter hours, superior students may omit most freshman level courses by passing comprehensive examinations.

Under the program, which begins next fall, all B.S. and B.A. students will be required to earn 12 credits in humanities, 4 to 12 in communication, 16 in science-mathematics and 16 in social sciences.

The revised curriculum, representing a year and a half of faculty study and discussion, does not copy that of any other college but is geared to meet specific needs.

POST OFFICE CHANGE COMING

Effective Dec. 29, the college post office will no longer be a post office substation, according to Milton Balgaard, business manager. Although college mailing operations will not be affected by the change, stamps and money orders will no longer be sold at the post office, nor will parcels be accepted for mailing.
